

I just want to voice my disapproval of requests by large phone companies to deregulate broadband access. If the FCC does this, it gives the large conglomerates an unfair advantage in determining who gets broadband access and for how much. My current ISP's (sonic.net) quality of service is literally orders of magnitude better than SBC, whose DSL lines they use. If companies like SBC (or Bell South) are allowed to set broadband pricing for ISPs, they can easily drive "the little guys" out of business, resulting in less choice and lower quality. That's bad thing. We shouldn't have to settle for the lowest common denominator. Please reject Bell South's petition. Thanks.
